DANGEROUS HOLIDAY

Officials quiet on fireworks enforcement despite 2013 tragedy

Chicago Tribune

A brand new artificial turf field now covers a portion of West Lawn Park, where a woman lost her foot and another woman was badly burned by stray fireworks last Fourth of July.

Residents who live near the Southwest Side park say the illegal fireworks display that went awry last year is an annual tradition that drives neighbors off their porches and into their houses and has led some to hose down their homes out of fear that sparks from the fireworks could set them ablaze.

Across the city, in Lincoln Park, the Chicago Park District reportedly spent $15,000 last year to repair damage to an artificial turf field after it was scorched in a fire believed to have been caused by another fireworks mishap.

Fireworks of any kind are illegal in Chicago and being caught possessing them or setting them off can result in a fine or criminal charges. Yet their crack and sparkle in city parks on the Fourth of July is about as common a sight as American flags.

Despite the damage caused by fireworks last year, authorities have not indicated what, if anything, they plan to do differently to enforce the ban on the explosives during this year's festivities. Given how many people illegally shoot off fireworks in the city, some residents also question whether there is anything to be done.

Asked if the Chicago Police Department planned to adjust its approach this year, spokesman Martin Maloney said in an email that the department "will continue to work with the Park District and pursue enforcement against those using illegal fireworks in an effort to ensure a safe holiday for residents."

In the 8th district specifically, where West Lawn Park is located, "district staff is fully aware of last year's incident and will work with local residents and parks employees to ensure a safe holiday," Maloney said.

Residents said illegal fireworks displays have historically gone ignored by police.

"I don't see police here," said Jeanette Buchanan, who lives across the street from West Lawn Park. "It's the Fourth of July, we're used to it. It just gets a little out of hand."

Still, Buchanan said, she was shocked to learn of the gruesome accident that took place at the park last year.

It was around II p.m. when a firework landed near where Kristina Perez was standing in West Lawn Park "and exploded with such force that it traumatically amputated her right foot and lower leg," according to a lawsuit filed by Perez against the city, the Park District and two individuals who Perez alleges set off the firework.

Perez would not comment for this story because of the ongoing lawsuit, her attorney said.

Her lawsuit alleges that for many years, the Park District knew that people were setting off large fireworks on and around the Fourth of July because the district, "through its maintenance workers, supervisors and other employees cleaned up the debris from the ignition of fireworks and other large explosive devices within the park."

The lawsuit also alleges that the Park District knew "of other incidents in which patrons of West Lawn Park or other parks operated by the Chicago Park District, were injured as a result of errant explosions of fireworks and other explosive devices which detonated in close proximity to the injured persons."

SOURCES: CONSUMER PRODUCT SAFETY COMMISSION, NATIONAL FIRE PROTECTION ASSOCIATION

Park District code specifies that "no person shall fire, discharge or set off any rocket, cracker, torpedo or other fireworks, or any substance of an explosive nature with the Park System, unless a permit has been issued."

Park District spokeswoman Jessica Maxey-Faulkner said that staff is on hand to communicate such rules only during park hours.

Fireworks displays "typically happen after hours when the park or field house is closed," Maxey-Faulkner said in an email. "The Chicago Police Department would handle incidents that occur after hours."

Maloney said last year's incident "remains an open investigation" and that no arrests had been made.

He said that around this time of year, Chicago police "historically seize many illegal fireworks and issue citations where appropriate." He said he was unable to provide figures as to how many fireworks have been seized or the number of citations that have been written.

CTA proposes speed measures for No. 66 bus

GOING PUBLIC Tracy Swartz

Ever been on a bus and thought that you could walk faster because the bus appeared to stop every few feet to pick up riders?

The CTA may be tackling this problem of too many stops on one of its most popular east-west routes.

The CTA is proposing changes to speed the No. 66 bus, which travels between Navy Pier and Austin and connects to the Red, Brown and Blue lines. The agency has proposed teaming with the Chicago Department of Transportation to time traffic signals to allow buses to move faster through downtown.

The agency also is proposing the elimination of nine bus stops and relocation of six bus stops between the Chicago Brown Line stop and Fairbanks Court and Grand Avenue. The CTA wouldn't say which stops are potentially on the chopping block.

"That's where we see the most issues" with efficiency and speed, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said. Chase cautioned that these proposals are preliminary.

The agency saw some success last year in improving bus efficiency when it added more bus trips along the route and replaced 40-foot buses that service the route with 60-foot buses as part of a systemwide plan to make buses and trains less crowded.

Chase said the agency is constantly reviewing bus routes to see where improvements can be made.

The No. 66 bus saw 8,3 million entries in 2013, down 3.1 percent from 8.6 million entries in 2012. Only the No. 9-Ashland bus, No. 49-Western bus and No. 79-79th routes saw more entries last year.

Today is the day

The CTA will complete its transition to Ventra, its new fare payment system, on Tuesday. The CTA now only will accept Ventra cards, some personal bank cards, certain phones and cash (on buses). The agency was accepting disposable fare cards through Monday. The CTA was supposed to complete its transition in December but pushed back the date so Ventra vendor Cubic Transportation Systems could fix glitches the agency said have now been

Lolla Cashless lets Lollapalooza fans leave wallets at home, pay with wristbands

By Ernest Wilkins | REDEYE

In an attempt to manage long lines at food, drink and merchandise stands, Lollapalooza this summer is introducing a new initiative called Lolla Cashless that allows concertgoers to leave their cash and credit cards at home.

Producers C3 Presents soon will begin sending festivalgoers ticket-bracelets that allow them entry into the event, which runs Aug. 1-3 in Grant Park. But this year concertgoers also will be able to use those wristbands for buying food, drinks and merchandise.

The system, developed by C3 partner Front Gate Tickets, uses radio frequencies so that concertgoers can sync their wristbands to their credit card information online using a pre-selected PIN code. The restaurant and drink vendors at Chow Town will have point-of-sale systems, and once a festivalgoer makes a purchase and enters his or her PIN number, the payment automatically will be applied to the credit card.

The PIN number requirement should alleviate security concerns, C3 Presents marketing director Patrick Dentler said. Also, the transactions are stored in the point-of-sale systems and not on the wristbands, which will prevent tech problems that can arise if Internet service is spotty at Grant Park.

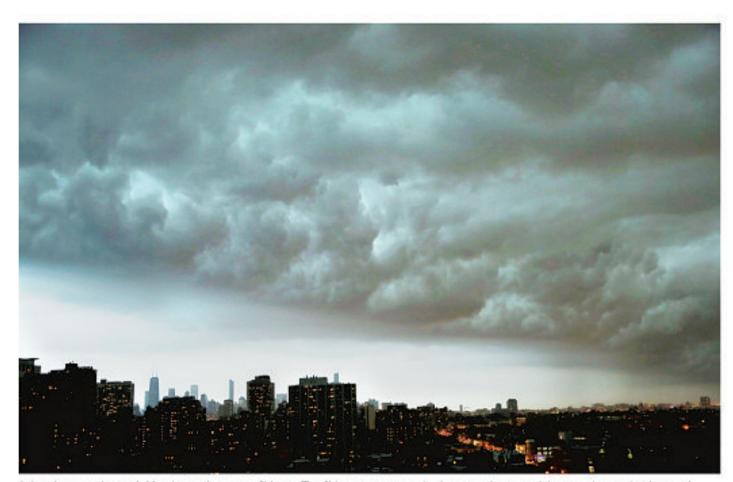

Dentler said C3 Presents tested the system at the CounterPoint Music Festival in Atlanta in April and the response was positive.

"We followed up with festgoers at CounterPoint and feedback was supportive," he told RedEye on Monday. "People ended up getting through the lines quicker at food stands and the bars."

Averaging about 25,000 visitors a day, CounterPoint is a much smaller festival than Lollapalooza, which averages 100,000 visitors a day. Lolla will be the first time a major music festival has used the system, but Dentler is optimistic.

"This is a dual effort with our partners at Front Gate Tickets to streamline the purchase process for our attendees," he said. "Lolla is excited and proud to introduce digital initiatives that enhance our fan experience while at Grant Park, and we hope Lolla Cashless will allow for more time in front of the stage and less time in line for food or drinks."

10 plead guilty to human trafficking

Chicago Tribune

Ten human traffickers snared by a wiretap three years ago have pleaded guilty to prostituting girls and young women in the Chicago area, said prosecutors, who on Monday touted the role that newly legal surveillance played in the outcome.

At a Monday news conference, Cook County State's Attorney Anita Alvarez showed video from the investigation in which one young woman bowed to the men who were selling her for sex on a West Side street. Separately, prosecutors played a recording in which one of the defendants can be heard whipping a victim with his belt.

Alvarez said all 10 defendants, nine men and one woman, pleaded guilty to felony trafficking charges over the past 14 months, with the most recent plea coming last week. All were sentenced to prison, she said, with terms ranging from six to 20 years.

The 16 victims whose trafficking led to charges ranged in age from 13 to 19, Alvarez said. Eleven of them were minors. She said all the victims were offered social services, and many took advantage of the support.

HOMICIDE BY THE NUMBERS

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

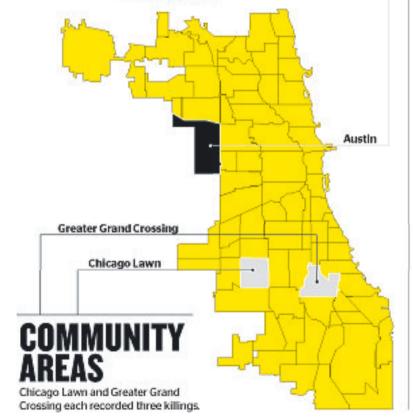

Chicago last month logged 34 homicides, as of Monday afternoon, according to a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data. Forty-four homicides were recorded in June 2013. About a fifth of the June homicides occurred in Austin, a West Side community area, RedEye determined. 15WARTZ@TRIBUNE.COM | @TRACYSWARTZ

COMMUNITY HIGHLIGHT: AUSTIN

Austin, Chicago's largest community area by population, often logs the highest homicide tally among community areas each month. The last time Austin went a month without recording a homicide was March 2013. RedEye looks at Austin's homicide totals the past five years.

Obama to take executive action on immigration

President Obama said Monday he would take executive action to reform the U.S. immigration system after hopes of passing legislation in Congress officially died. Ruling upholds religious objections to contraception

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday ruled that business owners can object on religious erounds to a provision of President Barack Ohama's health care law that requires closely held private companies to provide health insurance that covers birth control.

In a 5-4 vote on ideological lines, the justices said that such companies can seek an exemption from the so-called birth control mandate of the law known as Obamacare. The decision, which applies only to companies owned by a small number of individuals, means employees of those companies will have to obtain certain forms of birth control from other sources.

In a majority opinion by conservative Justice Samuel Alito, the court said the ruling applies only to the birth control mandate and does not mean companies would necessarily succeed if they made similar claims to other insurance requirements, such as vaccinations and blood transfusions.

In the majority opinion, Alito indicated that employees could still be able to obtain the birth control coverage via an expansion of an accommodation to the mandate that the Obama administration has already introduced for religious-affiliated posprofits. The accommodation allows health insurance companies to provide the coverage without the employer being involved in the process.

Under the accommodation, eligible nonprofits must provide a "self certification," described by one lower court judge as a "permission slip" authorizing insurance companies to

WOIId CUP

ROUND OF 16

U.S. vs. Belgium 3 p.m. Tuesday, ESPN

They're here. hat?

A 6-pack of questions for your U.S.-Belgium pregaming needs

Admit it. Deep down, you didn't really think the U.S. soccer team would escape the 2014 World Cup's Group of Death. But boy, are you excited for Tuesday's round of 16 game against Belgium. We have a confession to make: So are we. Here's what you need to know before you watch the USA take on the Red Devils. REDEVE; TRIBUNE CONTRIBUTED

How good is Belgium, anyway?

Belgium is 11th in the latest FIFA rankings, updated right before the World Cup, and the U.S. is 13th. That's encouraging. What's not is Belgium handled the U.S. 4-2 in a friendly in May, a match that wasn't as close as the score might indicate. The Belgians haven't exactly lit up the scoreboard in this tournament, but they have been great defensively and won all three of their games: 2-1 against Algeria and 1-0 against both Russia and South Korea.

Have these teams ever met in the World Cup?

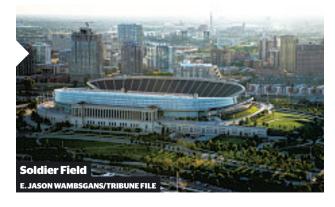

Just once. The U.S. blanked Belgium 3-0 in group play in 1930. That also was the year the Americans posted their best World Cup finish, bowing out in the semifinals. This means U.S. fans have definitive bragging rights at least until Tuesday's match ends.

Where's the biggest watch party in town?

That would be at Soldier Field, where U.S. Soccer will host another event after having to turn away fans from smaller venues during group-stage watch parties. Fans can enter Soldier Field starting at 1:30 p.m. Admission is free, but normal parking fees at the stadium will be in effect. Alcohol and other concessions will be sold inside.

Will there be cooling breaks?

Not likely. The referee has the discretion to give players a breather, like in the sweltering Mexico-Netherlands game Sunday. The average July high temperatures in Salvador, site of the U.S.-Belgium match, hover in the low 80s. According to weather.com, Tuesday's forecast calls for temperatures in the mid- to upper 70s with sunny skies. Darn near perfect for soccer.

Is Jozy Altidore going to play Tuesday?

The striker has been declared fit for action by U.S. Soccer, but coach Jurgen Klinsmann isn't ready to say how much playing time Altidore will see. "We don't know how much [he can play] ... but he's available," Klinsmann said during a news conference Monday. "It's now difficult to say how many minutes." So, yay?

Should I bet the mortgage on a U.S. upset?

Come on. We would never to tell you to gamble with your mortgage payment, or to gamble at all. That's not what we do. What we can tell you is Las Vegas oddsmakers heavily favor the more talented Belgium team in this matchup. Which means the U.S. can play the underdog card!

Your fill of World Cup news

No time for grudges

Jurgen Klinsmann is hoping the U.S. team's past doesn't come back to haunt them. The U.S. coach said he's concerned that Tuesday's match against Belgium features an Algerian referee. "He's able to speak French with their players on the field, not with us. We hope it's not a concern," Klinsmann said. He also noted the U.S. eliminated Algeria in 2010. "It's the country that we beat in the last second in the last World Cup."

Took him long enough

Uruguay's Luis Suarez took to Twitter on Tuesday to finally apologize after he bit an Italian player and was suspended. Gee, it only took his third biting incident to come around.

Harsh words, Mr. President

Meanwhile, Uruguayan President Jose Mujica is just a bit upset over Luis Suarez's suspension. "FIFA are just a

MANA		anna ann an ann an ann an an an an an an	ann an	and the second s	wannamin wanin wanin	mannamann mannamann
ŀ	Make a sports prediction for July.	The United States of America still will be the greatest country in the world.	Um. Yay soccer. Because Chicago baseball is just too depressing.	The Cubs will invent a new place in the standings—below last place.	World Cup fever will be at 100 after the USA wins this week!	Facebook will find another contest to pretend they were fans of.
2	How should ties be broken in the World Cup knockout round?	Whichever country has more freedom.	TKOs with the captains.	Whichever team can listen to Ann Coulter longer wins.	Team with the hotter players automatically wins.	Hopefully with a jarring crash from Ann Coulter's forehead.
3	What can you tell us about Belgium's men's soccer team?	They universally hate liberty.	Well, their team nickname is the Red Devils. So they sound super nice.	They like waffles. And choco- late. And I like stereotypes.	They'll at least have good beer to drown their sorrows in when they're crushed by the U.S. team.	Belgium? They tend to waffle on whatever's in style. flightapplause
4	How is a U.S. soccer viewing party different at Soldier Field than at Grant Park?	Even more democracy.	Reminds us how close we are to football season. BEARS.	You're required to boo the quarterback at Soldier Field. Even if he's not there.	Better concessions at Soldier Field. "more booze"	There's probably more affordable parking at Grant Park.
5	What's the holdup with Kane's and Toews' extensions with the Hawks?	Kaner lost his phone.	LeBron's agent thinks he can make another Big Three. Holding up the entire process.	Tommy Hawk wants a raise, problems ensuing.	They're waiting for the Carmelo/LeBron hype to die down so people give more effs.	Two championships mean nothing to owners. Some guy named Jordan won six and still got the boot!

GM: Rose 'looks ready to go'

Hmm, Bulls fans are getting some mixed Derrick Rose messages. On the one hand, Rose told Yahoo Sports on Sunday that he's not sure if he'll participate in USA Basketball's minicamp at the end of July. On the other, Bulls general manager Gar Forman says the superstar's good to go.

"All indications have been that he would participate," Forman said Monday. "We'll visit with him in the next couple of days. From a physical standpoint, he's doing terrific. Like we mentioned, he's playing 5-on-5. He hasn't skipped any steps. And there's been progress the whole way. He looks ready to go."

Cross your fingers that it's the second one.

ALBUMS

Phantogram Voices

My favorite album of the year so far is far from uplifting; in my February review I called it "alternately ethereal and dance-y but rarely optimistic." Thoughtful and haunting.

Schoolboy Q Oxymoron

With guests like Kendrick Lamar, 2 Chainz, BJ the Chicago Kid and Tyler, The Creator paying attention, it's time for the rest of the world to get a clue about this West Coast rapper and his snappy, socially conscious flow. Looks like he's on the precipice of mega-stardom: Q was nominated for a BET Award for best new artist.

Jack White Lazaretto

While it doesn't burn down the house in the same way as "Blunderbuss," White's lyrical genius never ceases to amaze.

Against Me! Transgender Dysphoria Blues

Hey, look, it's the legitimately good version of the crummy punk I loved in high school. "TDG" would've been a good album if it hadn't explored singer Laura Jane Grace's coming out as a transgender woman. Instead, it's a great one.

ALBUMS

Lucy Hale Road Between

Don't think about this as the debut country album from a "Pretty Little Liars" actress. Process it for how it should be remembered: a terrific collection of well-written songs you'll want to listen to on repeat this summer.

Pup Pup

Rowdy and exciting, the Toronto rockers' debut kinda smashes into your ears and through your bad mood.

LP Forever For Now

If there were any justice in pop music (which, usually, there isn't), this singer-songwriter would be the next big thing. So many potential hits here.

The War on Drugs Lost in the Dream

The group's Springsteen-y songs always ramble along, slowly or with momentum, imitating the lyrics' ongoing challenges and washing over you. On the dense "LITD," Adam Granduciel makes you gather some patience and return to ride his groove and understand his struggle with identity and separation, from himself and others.

SONGS

- Pup. "Reservoir"
- St. Vincent, "Digital Witness"
- The War on Drugs,

ALBUMS

Against Me! Transgender Dysphoria Blues

The whole project is good, but Laura Jane Grace's brutally honest look at her experience coming out as a transgender woman is a huge moment that should be celebrated. In an age when something as passive as using a hashtag can be considered "brave," there needs to be a new word created for what Against Me! accomplishes on this album.

Todd Terje It's Album Time

The Norwegian producer/DJ has stepped back from remixing artists like Michael Jackson to hone his own blend of disco-dipped, funky elevator music. Tunes like "Delorean Dynamite" immediately transport you to the sexiest night of your life. This is the kind of album that makes me feel like I should put on a nice suit and hit the town.

YG My Krazy Life

The best major label rap debut since Kendrick Lamar's "good kid, m.A.A.d City."

Schoolboy Q Oxymoron

The OTHER big West Coast rap release of 2014 effortlessly weaves tales of grim reality with carefree party jams.

SONGS

- Future featuring Andre 3000, "Benz Friendz"
- Chris Brown, "Loyal"
- Future featuring Pharrell, Pusha T and Casino, "Move That Dope"
- Mac DeMarco, "Salad Days"
- Young Thug featuring IAMSU!, "Stoner (Remix)"

Somewhere out there are people who think Robin Thicke's very public media blitz in support of "Paula," his new album dedicated to his estranged wife Paula Patton, is sweet and genuine and that she should just take him back already.

I couldn't disagree more. The whole thing is terrifying.

Appearing classy and discrete, Patton ("2 Guns") has chosen not to publicly react to Thicke's Tasmanian Devil-like tornado of groveling, but from his lyrics we've gleaned the following:

- » He drinks too much and made her feel small ("Get Her Back").
- » He has no self-control ("Still Madly Crazy").
- » He ... may have cheated? ("I thought everyone was going to eat the chip; turns out I'm the only one who double-dipped," he sings on "Black Tar Cloud.")

Most importantly, Thicke admits that Patton has already told him, in no uncertain terms, that it's over. "All that she wants is the action, not the words," he explains on "The Opposite of Me," clearly missing the irony. "All that she wants is the opposite of me." She said no. He has chosen not to comply.

At what point does Thicke's behavior become classified as stalking? Last year a piece in Psychology Today reported that 8 to 32 percent of women will be stalked in their lifetime and described the rejected stalker type as "an individual who has experienced the unwanted end of a close relationship, most likely with a romantic partner." The stalker's behaviors frequently include "harassing their targets, calling them repeatedly, as well as sending letters and gifts."

Gee, writing and releasing an entire album of songs dedicated to someone who has broken up with you sure sounds like it could fit the above qualifications. (See Ernest Wilkins' piece below on the lack of originality behind this gesture.)

If that's not enough to convince you, consider the video for "Get Her Back." Images of Thicke singing and a woman who vaguely resembles Patton are overlaid with word bubbles from what we can only assume are real textmessage conversations between the couple. Here's some of what Patton said:

- "I kept trying to warn you you were pushing me too far"
 - "You embarrassed me"
 - "I can't make love to you anymore"
 - "I don't even know who you are"

His response?

"This is just the beginning."

This album isn't a joke or an endearing, romantic plea; it's a big, fat red flag. Hopefully Patton is surrounded with people who are keeping her safe, and hopefully Thicke gets the help he needs to move on. The first step: Take away his microphone.

A soul singer records an album dedicated to an ex. Where have I heard this before? ... Oh, yeah. Marvin Gaye did it.

As with "Blurred Lines," the 2013 mega-hit that sounded so much like Gaye's "Got to Give It Up" that Gaye's family sued singer Robin Thicke, Thicke's new album "Paula" (as in Paula Patton, his estranged wife) represents the derivative artist stroking his wispy goatee and thinking, "What Would Marvin Do?" While Gaye recorded 1978's "Here, My Dear" to pay alimony to his ex-wife, Anna Gordy, both that record and "Paula" are fueled by love gone wrong. The difference is that Gaye did it because he needed the cash, not because he had a delusional thought process that led him to believe it was a good idea to tell the world this new album is a Hail Mary pass to try and get his better half back.

Dude, this isn't "Say Anything." Brazen displays of affection like that only work in fiction. Try that crap in real life and you look like a creep.

Also, Gaye and Thicke approach this concept in different ways. Gaye took what could have been his laziest effort and instead created a visceral mess that's one of the stronger pieces in his damn-near bulletproof discography. Thicke, on the other hand, comes off like a cross between a sociopath and the smarmy guy in a romantic comedy.

What's next? Is Thicke going to get bored with the music business and try out for the Detroit Lions, like Gaye did in 1970? Will Thicke do a sexy, so-weird-it's-awesome cover of the "Star-Spangled Banner" at an NBA All-Star game, like Gaye did in '83? Should we expect a new Thicke tune called "Sexual Healing II: Now with Obamacare?"

Whatever else Thicke decides to steal from a legend, don't listen to "Paula." Yes, Paula, this message also applies to you.

THE DIGIT

That's how much the "Hunger Games" movie franchise has earned so far, forbes.com reports. The business website cited the stat in its ranking of Jennifer Lawrence as the most powerful actress in Hollywood, shooting her ahead of No. 2, Sandra Bullock. Oh, and she's still just 23. For more on Forbes' power rankings, turn to Page 22.

Dis this?

Was Nicki Minaj throwing shade at Iggy Azalea on Sunday night? This time, we don't already know. While accepting her fifth-straight BET award for best female hip-hop artist, Minaj said, "My point is, what I want the world to know about Nicki Minaj is, that when you hear Nicki Minaj spit, Nicki Minaj wrote it," after name-dropping Azalea. And so a new beef begins ...

You don't own them

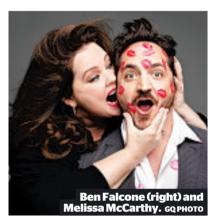

But hopefully you're smart enough to go see this stage show. THR.com reports that a musical version of "First Wives Club" will have its preview run this spring at Chicago's Oriental Theater before moving to Broadway. True, Goldie Hawn, Diane Keaton and Bette Midler probably won't be reprising their roles, but we probably can bet on a huge production number set to "You Don't Own Me."

We've known this for years, so it's nice to see that People magazine agrees: It just named Joe Manganiello the hottest bachelor in Hollywood. The "True Blood" star topped the list of 101 sexy singles and told the mag that smell is his favorite part of a woman. "It's funny I got cast as a werewolf. There's something about the smell on that part of a woman's neck where it meets the jaw, ahhhh! It's heaven." Keep talking, we're melting.

Foreign affairs

Oh, Emma Watson, always in trouble with the hired help. Wait, what? The British actress is under investgation by immigration officials for employing an American maid without the proper visa, the Independent reports. Watson would face up to $17,000 in fines if found quilty: British immigration would face 17,000 laughs from us for this absurd case.

THE OUOTE Melissa was like, 'Hurry, take your shirt off and put on this lunch meat.' I'm like, 'I guess this is what we do on Thursdays?' "

- "Bridesmaids" star Ben Falcone, to GQ, on his sex scene with wife Melissa McCarthy. Sounds more like a late Friday night to us, but ...

'Community' lifeboat

While Hulu isn't going to be saving "Community" soon, ew.com reported Monday that Yahoo will stream the show's sixth season instead. "'The reports of our cancelation have been greatly exaggerated.' - Mark Twain (The other version of this quote has been wrong for years). #SixSeasonsAndaMovie is real. Thank you Sony. Thank you Yahoo. Thank you Dan Harmon. And thank you to the greatest [bleeping] fans in the history of the human race. It's the internet. We can swear now," star Joel McHale said in a statement.
